AMERICAN PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION
OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

APA at the UNITED NATIONS

Advancing psychology to address global challenges and improve lives around the world.

OUR ROLE

The American Psychological Association (APA) is the largest scientific and professional organization representing psychology in the United States, including nearly 118,400 researchers, educators, clinicians, consultants, and students from across the U.S. and the world. APA is the largest psychology non-governmental organization (NGO) at the United Nations (UN)—we hold Special Consultative Status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) and are accredited to the Department of Global Communications (DGC).

WHAT WE DO

APA strives to be a leader and global partner in the advancement of psychology to benefit societies and improve lives around the world. Psychology includes the scientific study of the mind and behavior, incorporating topics from brain functioning to international relations. APA uses psychological science to promote human welfare and to advocate for social justice and the equitable treatment of all members of global society.

APA's accredited representatives at the United Nations work with other NGOs, with UN staff, and with representatives of member states to expand the understanding of psychology, make psychological science accessible to key decision makers, and use psychology's unique contributions to health and human welfare, human rights, science and technology, and public policy to advance the UN Sustainable Development Goals.

STAY INFORMED

www.apa.org/international/united-nations

For more information about the American Psychological Association and its work at the United Nations, contact:

Rashmi Jaipal, PhD
APA UN NGO Main Representative
American Psychological Association
Office of International Affairs
750 First Street
Washington, DC 20002-4242 USA
Phone: +1-202-336-6025
Email: international@apa.org
Web: www.apa.org

AMERICAN
PSYCHOLOGICAL
ASSOCIATION

