

PERMISSIONS ALERT FORM FOR APA JOURNAL AUTHORS

You must cite the original source in your paper for material borrowed from another source. In addition, you may need to secure permission to reuse the material. Below are listed the types of material that may require permission.

- Figures and tables: This includes both figures and tables that are directly reprinted and those that have been adapted from previously published figures and tables.
- Data: This applies only to data that are directly reproduced from another source; data that have been reanalyzed do not require permission.
- Test items, questionnaires, vignettes, etc.: This applies mainly to items that are from copyrighted and commercially available tests (e.g., MMPI, Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale, Stanford-Binet). Obtaining these permissions can be difficult and time-consuming, and a preferable alternative may be to reword or paraphrase those items so as not to duplicate the exact wording.
- Long quotations: Each copyright holder has its own definition of fair use. It is your responsibility to determine whether the copyright holder requires permission for long quotations.
- Photographs (and other images): Photos and other images not created by the author as part of the study may be subject to permission requirements. Copyright ownership and permission status can be particularly difficult to establish for images downloaded from the Internet, but we cannot publish them without full documentation.
- Photo releases: The subjects of photographs (if other than the authors) must give permission for publication if they are recognizable. This is done through a release letter. This is not an issue of permission to use copyrighted material, but permission to use someone's likeness. If images have been taken from research databases, there is no need to seek a release, but you will need permission from the database copyright holder.

If your article contains material that has been reproduced or adapted from an APA publication and it does not exceed APA's fair use criteria, then you do not need to request permission from APA. (Per APA, fair use constitutes single text extracts of 400 words or fewer or cumulative text extracts of 800 words or fewer.) It is the author's responsibility to obtain the fair use guidelines for the relevant copyright holder to determine whether you need to secure permission. The use of a figure, table, test item, appendix, abstract, or similar work that was commercially copyrighted or published in a book requires permission.

If permission is required, contact the copyright holder (usually the publisher) and request permission to reproduce or adapt the material in all formats (online as well as in print). When permission has been secured, send this to the Peer Review Coordinator. Start this process early, as it may take several weeks.

Your article cannot go into production until all permissions are secured for reproduced and adapted items. For more information regarding permissions policies, see pp. 387–390 of the seventh edition of the APA Publication Manual.

A. Disclosure of Liability for Infringement

The author(s) acknowledges responsibility for any reused or adapted material in the Manuscript and affirms compliance with U.S. copyright laws.

- U.S. Copyright Law (Title 17 of the U.S. Code): U.S. Copyright Office
- Fair Use Guidelines: U.S. Copyright Office - Fair Use

The author understands that any infringement of these laws may result in legal liability, including financial penalties and claims from copyright holders. Furthermore, the publisher may be required to issue correction notices, remove material that has not cleared permissions, or in severe cases, retract the article.

By signing below, the author affirms full responsibility for ensuring compliance with copyright laws and accepts liability for any resulting legal claims or damages.

- a. As corresponding author, I am acknowledging that I have reviewed and agree with the terms of this Agreement and any guidelines, policies, or requirements herein.
